Seeburg, Taito agreement

Seeburg Industries, Inc. has reached an agreement to sell the business and certain assets of its Chicago-based products division to Taito America Corp., an affiliate of Seeburg's Japanese distributorship.

Negotiations reported earlier to sell the products division to a group of Seeburg distributors (PLAY METER UPDATE, September 14, 1977) were terminated.

The terms of the new agreement call for Taito to acquire about $7.3 million of the products division's assets for cash, notes, and assumption of current liabilities.

The agreement, according to Edward D. Miller of Taito America Corp. in Chicago, allows Seeburg Industries to retain ownership of the products division's Chicago plant together with its machinery and equipment. Taito will be leasing these from Seeburg Industries and, according to Miller, will be holding an option to buy them.

Miller noted that the purchase plan has yet to be approved by the entire board of directors but that the target date for that board of director's decision is set for the end of December.

"With this, we will get the Seeburg name," said Miller. Then he added, "Our plan is to strengthen and continue that name. The primary thrust of this agreement is that there will be a continuation of the Seeburg products line and the Seeburg products division."

When asked if the change of ownership would represent any change in the final product, Miller said, "We plan to institute many improvements in the product line and overall operation."

"There's a great future for music in this industry," continued Miller. "The revolution that has come to the games industry has yet to come to the music industry, and we hope to bring about that kind of change."

The products division of Seeburg manufactures coin-operated phonographs and post-mix vending equipment.

The transaction does not affect Seeburg's other operations. Seeburg will continue—through its Choice-Vend, Williams Electronics, Qualitone, King Musical Instrument, and entertainment divisions—to manufacture and market bottle and can vending machines, coin-operated amusement games, hearing aids, musical instruments, and operate a theater-in-the-round.

Anti-pinball ordinance quashed

An anti-pinball ordinance which had been in effect since 1961 in Baton Rouge, Louisiana has been overturned, and the time to appeal that court decision has passed.

A Baton Rouge ordinance which had prohibited persons under 18 years of age from playing pinball games was quashed in June by the City Court of Baton Rouge. But at that time, the city of Baton Rouge announced that it planned to appeal the decision. However, according to Max LaBranche, the attorney who represented a Baton Rouge arcade operator in the case, the city has failed to register that appeal; and the time allotted for that appeal has passed.

Therefore, the June decision which was decided in favor of the arcade operator is now res judicata. The 16-year-old anti-pinball ordinance has been quashed.

LaBranche told PLAY METER that the Baton Rouge ordinance pre-dated a law passed in 1966 by the Louisiana state legislature which outlawed gambling-type pinball machines. That law, said LaBranche, specifically exempted amusement-type flipper games from the ban and, in effect, made it unconstitutional for a municipality to outlaw amusement-type pinball games.

LaBranche also argued that other coin-operated amusement devices such as foosball tables, pool tables, and arcade pieces were not prohibited by the Baton Rouge ordinance.

Input multiplexer failures

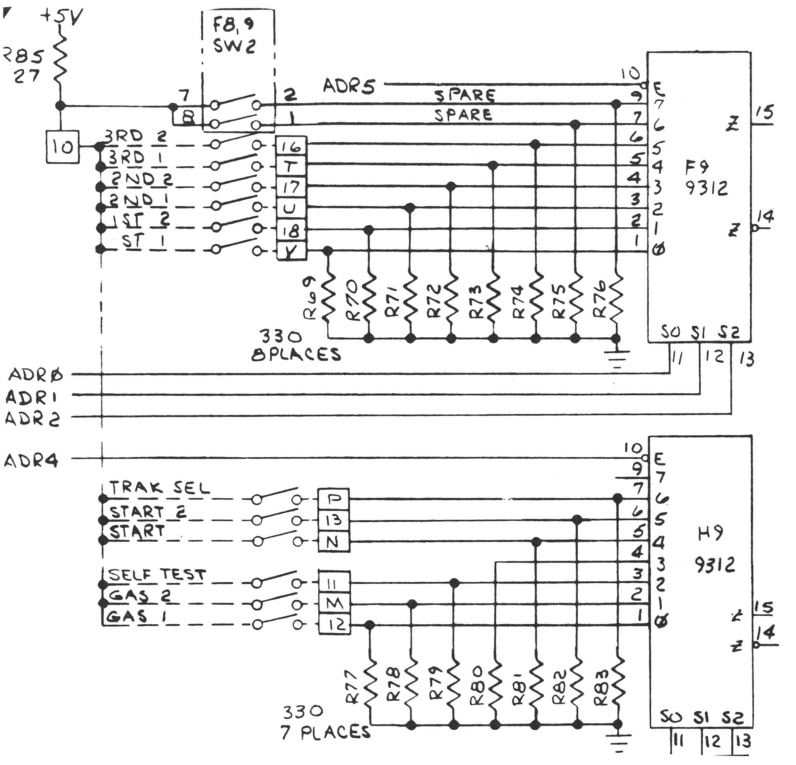
Virtually every modern microprocessor-based game system uses an input multiplexer scheme to couple the player control to the computer.

Because the majority of input multiplexer failures will show up as shorted input lines, a VOM can be used to identify a bad IC on location.

It's a simple process to check the device by measuring the resistance between each input and ground. A bad input will show a considerably lower resistance than any of the other good inputs.

It's not uncommon for more than one input or device to fail simultaneously. Once identified, the bad device can be replaced and the game repaired without pulling the board and suffering any additional downtime.

Figure one shows a typical input multiplexer scheme. In this case, the device can be tested by measuring the resistance of the input at the edge connector.



Service literature

In the "Mailbox" section oi September's PLAY METER, Leon B. Wiltsey, Jr. of Key West, Florida asked where he could get some good literature on how to service and conduct preventive maintenance on pinball machines. Detailed service and schematic interpretation is available from all of the major pinball manufacturers (Bally, Gottlieb, and Williams).

These service manuals can be obtained through the distributors or by writing directly to the factory. They contain a wealth of information that can really help you understand and repair the games. These manuals would be an ideal place for a serviceman to start his service literature.

Atari's steel pins

Atari is now producing steel pins for its gearshift assembly. These new pins do not peen at the end like their aluminum counterparts.

At ten cents apiece, they are a worthwhile investment for reducing service calls.

Atari's new parts number for this pin is 73-7C0307SC.

British firm produces strength tester

Alca Electronics of Oldham, Lancashire, England, has produced a new arcade game called the Striker.

Distributor samples were dispatched in October and displayed at the recent Parks Show in New Orleans.

The Striker is a tall strength tester which has already had site trials in British arcades with considerable success. The machine is on 10c play with three games for 25c.

It comes with a mallet on a chain with which the player hits the top of a protruding bar. His score is then registered on a large clock with a scorecard to give the appropriate comments for his degree of success.

Michael Green, joint managing Director of Alca, said, "There is no connection between the mallet itself and the clock so there is no chance that rough treatment will damage the mechanism. And the strength adjustment is an accurate one." The machine has sound effects and pulsing lights.

German distributor honored

Alfred W. Adickes, founder and owner of Nova Apparate, Hamburg, Germany, was recently honored at a special luncheon given by the German Operators Association (ZOA) to mark his 50th year as a major distributor of coin-operated machines.

To commemorate the occasion the association presented Adickes with a handsomely engraved gold medal and plaque. The inscribed message thanked Adickes for the energy, vision, inspiration and uncompromising dependability he brought to the coin-operated industry in Germany and other European countries.

Over the years Adickes has enjoyed a unique and close relationship with American industries. His association with Rock-Ola Manufacturing Corporation spans nearly 50 years. Adickes pioneered the introduction of coin-operated phonographs and flippers into Europe.
